The City of Richmond Archives, through its busy volunteer program, has been actively involved in the international “History Pin” project. That project, administered from the United Kingdom, has brought together archives, libraries, museums and individuals from around the world to add significant historical photographs to an online map of the world.

Historical images are pinned on the map and, in many cases, are layered over contemporary google street views to identify the present-day location of historical buildings, places and events. In addition, special tours and collections can be created to provide a thematic perspective on the past.

The stellar volunteer team of John Campbell and Graham Turnbull has worked diligently to pin over 200 photographs from the holdings of the City of Richmond Archives on to the “History Pin” map. Using these images, John and Graham have created a variety of tours and collections reflecting aspects of Richmond’s past.

Online users can take a tour on the interurban tram as it leaves Marpole Station, crosses the rail bridge, and passes every tram stop along the line until it reaches Steveston. Users can experience a “Day at the Races” in the 1920s, when Brighouse Racetrack was the premier horse race course in western Canada. Users can take a tour of the aftermath of the 1918 Steveston Fire or follow the building of the George Massey (Deas Island) Tunnel through a chronological tour detailing each stage of construction. These are just samples of what you can find on the City of Richmond Archives “channel” on History Pin.

People are encouraged to enjoy this great resource on the web. Make sure you have an up-to-date web browser and go to the City of Richmond Archives channel at: www.historypin.com/channels/view/7947312/.
Focus on the Record—Early Records of Dyking and Drainage in Richmond

In 1936 the Township of Richmond assumed control of dyking and drainage activities within its boundaries by amalgamating its own works established by by-law with those of two other existing authorities: the New Lulu Island Slough Dyking District (NLISDD) and the Lulu Island West Dyking District (LIWDD).

These two bodies had been established by petition of landowners to the provincial legislature: the NLISDD in 1900 encompassing the slough complex from Francis road south; the LIWDD in 1905 largely encompassing the area west of #3 Road. Commissioners elected to administer these districts were responsible for appointing an engineer who drew up technical plans and assessments of the land benefited.

The Archives holds a wide assortment of records of these two bodies including minutes, assessment rolls, petitions and correspondence. Many provide details of an evolving landscape; drainage of land and protection from periodic flooding was crucial to the success of farming activities.

Because the land was taxed by these bodies to pay for works, there were detailed records kept of land valuation and plentiful communication between the commissioners and landowners, including minutes of courts of revision. The records provide a vivid picture of early agricultural land use and the transition from private to public dyking.
Retirement of Ken Young

This spring marked the retirement of Ken Young as the city’s Manager of Records and Information. Ken first came to Richmond from the City of Vancouver Archives in 1989 to become Municipal Archivist, and was, from his first day on the job, instrumental in ensuring that the present Archives’ facility at the Richmond Library and Cultural Centre was built to the highest of standards.

In his eleven years as Municipal/City Archivist, Ken established the solid reputation of the City of Richmond Archives within the Canadian archival community. Under his direction, the Archives was one of the first institutions in Canada to adopt national standards for the description of records, to develop automated databases to manage archival holdings, and to provide online access to holdings via the Internet.

Ken also served as a mentor and role model for a great number of archivists graduating from UBC’s Master of Archival Studies program, and was active in various capacities with provincial archival councils and associations.

Congratulations, Ken, on your well-deserved retirement and a future knowing you contributed so much to preserving and making accessible the evidence of Richmond’s past!

Archives and Public Art

As the public art landscape of Richmond continues to grow, the resources at the Archives have been increasingly used for inspiration by a number of artists. One recent example is the art installation at the No. 4 Road Drainage Pump Station, which used a 1954 aerial photograph and images derived from other historical photographs in the Archives’ holdings. The City of Richmond was recently awarded the 2012 ACECBC Award of Excellence for its design of the pump station.

Friends of the Richmond Archives’ Community Exhibit Program

The Friends of the Richmond Archives have embarked on an exciting new initiative this year, the Community Exhibit Program. In addition to displays at various events in the community, the Friends have expanded their exhibit program to include ongoing displays at the Archives and at various locations in Richmond. Leading this initiative have been Christine McGilvray and Barbara Williams, with able support from Graham Turnbull and Lynne Waller.

This year, the program has mounted 4 different exhibits in the display case in the vestibule leading to the Archives’ reference room, a fascinating display on horseracing at Brighouse Racetrack in the 1920s at the Library and Cultural Centre, and an exhibit of photographs and other records of the James Thompson family at the Thompson Community Centre. In addition, exhibits were created for the Earth Day Summit at London-Steveston High School, the Steveston Salmon Festival, and the London Farm Family Farm Days.

The membership year for the Friends of the Richmond Archives runs from October 1 through September 30. Members are encouraged to renew at the Archives Tea, by mail, or at the Archives itself. Annual fees are a very low $5 per person ($10 per couple).
